Momo

Momo is a Nepali steamed dumpling filled with minced vegetables or ground meat served with a side of achar, a dipping sauce. Long ago, when the indigenous Newari community travelled to Tibet for trade, they discovered the local dumplings so delightful that they wanted to replicate it in Nepal. Of course, they did not have the same ingredients available locally and thus the Momo was born; a Newari twist to the Tibetan dumpling.

Bhuteko Bhaat

Farmers' fried rice; originated because farmers who would carry lunch wanted the convenience where all veggies, meat and spices were added to rice to reduce the number of containers they had to carry. Over the years, this dish has derived flavours from other parts of Nepal and became popular among the city crowd as well.

Gorkhali Chili

The Newari community would trade with Tibetans and during their travels got an in-depth taste and knowledge about the local food in Tibet. They wanted to replicate the delicacies from there with whatever was available in Nepal. This brought out many new dishes to the Nepali cuisine and quickly caught on with the city crowd. This chili dish is one such variation of the Tibetan spicy dish which is a stir fry of vegetables, meat, spices and sauces.

What makes our food so special

Our founders and Chefs perfected the recipes over several years of cooking at various restaurants across Nepal, in the Himalayas during expeditions and around the world. It is a taste that Nepalese would reminisce on when they think about authentic food back in Nepal; a taste that takes you back home! All the spices and proportions are from the secret recipe that originated by improvising the traditional recipe over several years.
