NHLP Posts Domestic Violence Newsletter

The National Housing Law Project (NHLP) has posted the most recent issue of its series of newsletters, which are intended to address a variety of current housing issues that affect survivors of domestic and sexual violence.

As the announcement states, the Issue Two 2020 Newsletter details a court decision where a survivor prevailed on appeal against a housing authority, with the court rejecting the housing authority's stated reasons for evicting the survivor and her daughter due to the offsite criminal activity of her abuser. The issue also includes a survey on evictions during COVID-19 conducted by NHLP, a short description of the CDC eviction moratorium, and a summary of HUD's COVID-19 FAQs for public housing agencies that include discussion of VAWA protections. The newsletter also features an article that outlines the legal protections for survivors in rental housing admissions.
