

About Lesley Curwen

Lesley was a BBC reporter and presenter for more than 20 years before she started helping others to develop their own communication skills. Her professional experience and background is business and economics, which means she brings a sound commercial focus to her work as a facilitator and coach.

Lesley specializes in communicating both written and spoken messages particularly when they contain tough news or difficult decisions. She knows what it's like to be under pressure to communicate a complex message clearly and concisely, with her past experience presenting business slots on the Today program on BBC Radio 4.

She has unrivalled experience of interviewing global CEOs, finance ministers and central bankers. She has a thorough understanding of how executives from all over the world react when thrust into high-stakes interview situations.

Awards

- 2 Wincott Awards (Business Journalism)