Blueprint Full Length Exams

3

AAMC Exams

We have found that the students that have the largest score increases tend to complete more test-like practice questions through a combination of Full Length exams, Qbank questions and End of Chapter Exams. As such, we set a goal for you to complete 4 Blueprint Full Length Exams, 3 AAMC Exams, and 1,500 additional practice questions in your Blueprint MCAT account. It is also imperative that you review content using a combination of the learning modules and books, since the MCAT does not reward content knowledge, but rather expects it.

Plan to spend

10-15

Hours per week
outside of class
per lesson

Each class lesson will have pre-class modules and post-class quizzes assigned. Generally, you can expect to spend around 10-15 hours per week outside of class per lesson. If you are taking a once a week class, your total time commitment will be around 12-18 hours each week for MCAT prep, but for a twice a week class, it will be closer to 25-30 hours per week. Classes that alternate between meeting once and twice a week will require on average 15-20 hours per week.

This table outlines how you can accomplish these goals as you work through the 16 lessons of the course. The running totals show how many modules and questions you should have completed after working through all of the required coursework (pre and post class assignments) for each lesson. Note that this table only includes the required modules which are reviewed during a lesson. You should also plan to complete the recommended modules which you can schedule in as you have time.

Expert Advice

Blueprint's MCAT Experts suggest that you use AAMC exams as the last 4 exams that you complete to emulate the real exam as closely as possible. If you are taking the exam soon after your class ends you should take AAMC exams once a week for the 4 weeks before the exam. If this overlaps with a BP exam listed above, complete an AAMC exam instead of a BP exam at that time.
